With the enormous wealth of information available for the Hero System 6 th Edition it might seem at first look that running a Hero game would be very complicated for the gm. Steven Long and his merry minions at Hero Games have done a spectacular job of creating a very playable game with mechanics and concepts that just work. That's the thing about Hero, complex as it can be everything just works.

While every player of the Hero System knows all about Distinctive Features and Physical, Psychological, and Social Complications, sometimes it can be a pain in the rear to actually come up with something appropriate. With the Master Lists, all a player or GM need do is seach around and pick the Limitations he likes. As can be seen from the change in title, the Master Lists are now Hero System 6th Edition compliant. Origins of the Master Lists

When last we left off, I had finished reviewing HERO System 6th Edition Volume 1: Character Creation, which is now big enough that it apparently requires a second core book to cover everything else that HERO System does. Thus- HERO System Sixth Edition Volume 2: Combat and Adventuring . After the table of contents, which as in "6E1" covers the material from both books, "6E2" starts with Chapter One: Entering Combat.

In the table below, the Heroic range is based on the base level of the characteristic in Hero System 6th edition, and on the suggested Normal Characteristic Maxima. Combat Values (DEX/3) I regard raw combat values as raw, untrained fighting ability. If you want to add training, buy combat skill levels.
