The purity of the acrylic acid produced usually exceeds 99.5%. Acrylic acid and its esters are usually stabilised with inhibitors such as hydroquinone monomethyl ether (MeHQ). Because MeHQ is only effective in the presence of oxygen, the acrylic monomers must be stored under air or an atmosphere containing at least 5 Vol.-% of oxygen. The stabilised monomers are generally stored below 25 ° C. Acrylic acid should not be stored below 15 ° C because acrylic acid crystallises.
