In Britain, a group called the Management Charter Initiative sought to barrel ahead with the certification of managers, not making the case for management as a profession so much as assuming it. As its director told a newspaper, the MBA "is the only truly global qualification, the only license to trade internationally" (Watts 1997:43).

Managers Not MBAs. A Hard Look at the Soft Practice of Managing and Management Development. By Henry Mintzberg Published by Berrett-Koehler, 2004 ISBN 1576752755. Introduction. It's time to recognize conventional MBA programs for what they are — or else close them down. They're specialized training in the functions of business, not general education in the practice of managing.

Business schools operate on the presumption that management is a science and that an MBA grad is a professional. Management is not a science. A science involves the pursuit of knowledge. Managers do not pursue knowledge. They have a completely different function. If management is not a science, is it a profession?

What I get from reading Mintzenberg's ideas is that somebody with a MBA and zero experience shouldn't be in a management postion due to not really understanding the business in which they work. I agree with that part. Where I think he is flawed is that many of the top MBA schools require an applicant to have professional experience prior to being accepted into program.
