Soot and sawdust. Fungus and cellulose. All over the world, an emerging generation of designers and makers are rethinking raw materials and presenting radical solutions to the challenges of designing in the modern world. From dwindling planetary resources to a prevalent 'take-make-discard' model of consumption, design has helped nurture the seeds of environmental destruction, creating unprecedented levels of waste and new forms of material scarcity.

Radical Matter - Franklin Till

Kate Franklin and Caroline Till believe we are on the brink of a "materials revolution". In the introduction to their new book, Radical Matter: Rethinking Materials for a Sustainable Future, the pair argue that the current "take-make-discard" method of production - making products in large factories to be shipped around the world and discarded a few months later - is no longer sustainable.
